JEWELRY

The selection of jewelry listed below are Roman Gold Earrings from the 1st-3rd Century A.D. All are made from gold of high purity, usually 24kt, and are intact unless otherwise stated. The workmanship is delicate and attractive. The gold loop of these ancient earrings was carefully twisted into place by the jeweler so that they were permanently attached. This is a rare opportunity to acquire choice ancient gold work at very moderate prices.

134 ROMAN MARBLE SCULPTURE; Late 1st or 2nd Century AD. Hecate Triformis, This goddess of the underworld worshipped with weird nocturnal rites at cross roads. Much of modern witch lore and the witch cult can be traced to Hecate Triformis. The sculpture is of high quality, executed in fine-grain white marble. Condition is excellent. Two projecting forearms are missing and there are a few minor bruises and insignificant chips. Slight traces of pigment are still visible in the hair. This excellent sculpture would be at home in a museum or the most discerning private collection. $10\frac{1}{2}''$ high $\times 3\frac{1}{2}''$ wide 4000

135. GREEK TERRACOTTA FIGURINE; From Centuripae in Sicily, c. 300 BC. Young woman seated on stone outcropping. Rejoined expertly from a number of fragments with in-filling of a couple of small missing pieces, mainly on the back, missing lower arm and fingers of one hand. Surface well preserved, including most of the overslip. Slight traces of pigment. Attractive. $11\frac{1}{2}''$ high $\times 7''$ wide 1300

136. ROMAN TERRACOTTA VASE, Period of the reign of Augustus, 27 BC.-14 AD. Greyware predecessor to Arreinte ware. Large vase, BellKrater shape decorated with petal design, floral band, and band of small cupids. Intact but for part of one small lug-handle and a few insignificant edge knocks. Choice and very rare. $8''$ high $\times 12\frac{1}{2}''$ diameter 3000

137. GREEK. SOUTH ITALIAN RED—FIGURE BELL-KRATER; c. 330 BC. The primary side is decorated with spirited figures of a young Satyr, two Maenads, and Dionysos. They carry various cult instruments, and still more are hung in the field. The secondary side bears three concurring youths. Style is excellent, particularly on the primary side. The surfaces are extremely nice, even the delicate and migratory whites and creams. Rejoined from large fragments with no losses. Large, attractive, and worthy of a museum or a fine home. $19\frac{1}{2}''$ high $\times 19\frac{1}{4}''$ diameter 6500

138 ROMAN MARBLE SCULPTURE, 1st-2nd Century AD. Statuette of the goddess Cybele seated on her throne holding a patera. Sculpted in fine grain white marble, with a light honey-colored patina. Undoubtedly a temple votive dedication reproducing the cult image. Absolutely intact with no breaks or damage. Temple dedications were often buried near the temple precinct, thus accounting for the magnificent preservation $10\frac{1}{4}'' \times 6\frac{3}{4}''$ 2500

The following two Roman Mosaics, from a villa in Roman Syria, date to the fifth Century AD. Mosaics are removed by gluing canvas to their front and lifting the pieces intact and in their original positions from the decayed mosaic grout in which they were first set. A new cement base is then poured, the mosaic still attached to the canvas is set in the new base, and then the glue is dissolved away and the canvas removed. It is laborious and difficult, and mosaics seldom appear on the market. Both are composed of various colored marble tessera.
